DECA Class Celebrates 12 Days of Christmas

By Wendy Lough

This is the first year that the Watford City High School DECA class put on such an event. The McKenzie County Library in Watford City held this event for the DECA students and the community members that attended every day. It was held when DECA replaced the former school group of FBLA.

As many people are familiar with FBLA which stands for Future Business Leaders of America. DECA which may not be as familiar with, has been around for nearly 70 years and has impacted the lives of more than ten million students, educators, school administrators and business professionals since its founding in 1946. DECA also prepares emerging leaders and entrepreneurs for careers in marketing, finance hospitality and management in high schools and colleges around the globe.

DECA's programs and activities have constantly evolved as they use the latest technology and apply cutting edge educational research. Its organized into two unique student divisions each with programs designed to address learning styles, interest and focus of its members. The High School Division includes 3500 chapters, 200,000 students.

Mr. Cody Brooks is the High School Teacher who is now in charge and changed the group from FBLA to DECA. On the day I was there, December 13, there were only 2 young girls with a Mother that attended. The student, little girls and parent had a good time with the coloring activities that Gracie had chosen for that day's activity to go along with the book.

The DECA student starts out by reading a book for that day, then there is an activity that completes the program. Gracie enjoys working with kids and plans on going on to college for a career that will keep her in a field that she enjoys.

Grazing Workshop Slated For January

Submitted by Julie Goss

Cell Grazing, dormant season grazing, swath grazing, crop residue grazing and bale grazing, everything you need to know about grazing. Steve Kenyon, Green Pastures Ranching Ltd. will be in Sidney on January 17 to speak about these grazing alternatives. The workshop will begin at 9:30 a.m. at Richland County MSU-Extension Meeting Room, 1499 N Central Ave, Sidney, MT. Cost to attend will be $20 which will include lunch.

Steve Kenyon runs a custom grazing business in the Westlock, Alberta area under the name of Greener Pastures Ranching Ltd. He on average manages about 1000 head of livestock on 3000 acres of leased land. By using extended grazing techniques, he is able to pasture cattle year round. This is accomplished by using a combination of intensive cell grazing, dormant season grazing, swath grazing, crop residue grazing and bale grazing. Steve has become well respected in the agriculture community for his business management and innovative ideas.

Steve has been teaching sustainable grazing management for more than ten years and has been a keynote speaker at many conferences and seminars throughout Canada and the U.S. He is a writer for the Stockman Grass Farmer magazine and also for the Canadian Cattleman Magazine. He is also the author of “The Calendar of the Year Round Grazier”. Steve has a very energetic personality, which compliments a very down to earth common sense approach to farm business management. Yet he is still just a producer and presents in a very honest and straightforward style. Steve has developed and instructs the “Year Round Grazing Systems” Agricultural Business Management Course. This three-day course includes a human resource component, economics, finances, grazing principles, cell design and pasture rejuvenation. This course will take you right into design and planning of a year round grazing system.

The Mission statement of Greener Pastures is “Economic Sustainability for Generations” It is important to provide an enjoyable, profitable and sustainable business for future generations. Steve believes that to be profitable in the long term, you must use sustainable agriculture practices. You have to work with nature, not against her. Greener Pastures is an environmentally sustainable ranch that improves the land. The focus is to maintain an effective water cycle, carbon cycle, nitrogen cycle and mineral cycle. Our wildlife habitats and riparian areas need to be preserved. The health of our soils and our soil organisms needs to be understood and protected in order to ensure that our agricultural businesses remain profitable and sustainable.

To learn more about Steve, check out his website www.greenerpasturesranching.com and join us on January 17 at the Richland County MSU-Extension meeting room, 1499 N Central Ave, Sidney, MT.

We will also be co-hosting the Soil and Water Conservation Districts of Montana and the Natural Resource Conservation Service Soil Health Workshop Series on January 19 at Richland County Event Center. To register for this workshop visit www.swcdm.or/soil-health or by contact Ann, 406-433-5711. Early registration cost through January 8 is $15. At the door registration is $20.

Derek Axten and Brendon Rockey will be the featured speakers at that workshop focusing on the cropland side of soil health. Derek Axten owns and operates a diversified grain farm in Southern Saskatchewan with his family. He has implemented innovative ideas to improve sustainability and profitability of the family farm. While attending workshops and conferences with his wife, they met farmers and scientists who taught them to change the way they looked at farming. This led to their journey towards soil health and regenerating their farmland. Learning about soil biology and how soil functions, has renewed their passion for farming, and improved the farm's productivity.

Brendon Rockey of Rocky Farms in Center, Colorado, raises specialty potatoes and quinoa on 500-acres under irrigation at 7,600 feet above sea level using a biotic approach. Brendon chooses to use biological inputs like companion crops, livestock, green manure and flowering strips instead of synthetic fertilizers, herbicides, fungicides and insecticides. Biotic management supports a healthy, diverse pollinator population as well as a healthy farm and healthy consumers. You can find more information on these two speakers at www.notill.org/derek-axten and www.brendenrockey.com.

Health Department Administrator Co-Authors Peer Reviewed Publication

Richland County Health Department's administrator Judith LaPan recently co-authored an article in the peer-reviewed journal Impact Assessment and Project Appraisal, evaluating strategies for conducting impact assessments in areas affected by oil development.

The study is a case-study of Richland County's experience implementing the Mobilizing for Action Through Planning and Partnerships, or MAPP, process. The MAPP process is a framework for community needs assessment and strategic planning. Richland County has implemented the framework through the Communities in Action (CIA) process.

The CIA process has been in place for more than a decade, and is an umbrella program to organize local service providers, volunteers, and community groups focused on improving quality of life in Richland County. The focus of CIA through the MAPP process is to identify community needs, plan actions strategically, and build connections between people and organizations to implement strategies to improve quality of life.

The case study sought to answer the question: Does the MAPP process provide a useful template for impact assessment in energy boom contexts, and in what ways?

The authors first determined whether the MAPP process aligned with current impact assessment best practices. They found that both frameworks focus on the importance of relevant and actionable data, as well as efficiency, and both prioritize systems thinking.

In the evaluation of CIA, LaPan and co-authors conducted four activities: a Ripple Effect Mapping exercise with the CIA steering committee; stakeholder interviews with leaders who held prominent roles in CIA; Town Hall meetings around the county to solicit input on current issues and feedback on CIA; and a document analysis detailing the group's history, process and achievements.

The Communities in Action process has been in place since 2005, when, in response to the changing economic atmosphere and emergence of oil and gas activity in Richland County, a group of 15 leaders formed the CIA steering committee. Steering committee members represent a breadth of community group, including the health department, library, hospital, and local governance, among other participants. The group conducted the first robust set of local assessment activities, which informed a "Quality of Life" profile in 2007. From then on, quality of life assessments were conducted regularly, and "State of the Community" conferences were held to identify changing needs and priorities in the area.

The authors had several conclusions about the efficacy of the CIA process in the context of rapid oil development, including that the process helped to maintain the regular provision of services to the population during a time when most were "doing damage control", during the height of the oil boom. The authors found merit in further investigating the MAPP process as an applicable model for evaluating the impacts of oil and gas development because of its alignment with best practices, opportunities for monitoring and mitigating issues, and relevance in negotiation challenges specific to oil and gas development.

Donations To Williston Salvation Army Short $32k

The Christmas fundraising campaign of the Williston Salvation Army is running dangerously behind. As of Dec. 18, total donations to the Williston Salvation Army had reached only $84,500. On the same date last year, total donations were just over $116,500.

"That's a shortage of $32,000," said Captain Cappy Moore, co-leader of the Williston Salvation Army. "Without help, we won't reach our $183,000 Christmas fundraising goal."

If the goal isn't met by Dec. 31, programs could suffer in 2018. Money raised during the Christmas season accounts for the bulk of the Williston Salvation Army's yearlong budget, fueling programs that provide food, clothing, transportation assistance, and other critical services for locals in need.

"Thank you to all who have given to the Williston Salvation Army so far this Christmas season," Moore said. "We humbly ask for a strong boost of support between now and the New Year."

Giving to the Williston Salvation Army is easy:

- Donate online. Your credit card gift will be allocated to the Salvation Army location nearest your billing ZIP code.
- Give at a kettle or sign up to bell ring. Bell ringers raise an average of $30 per hour. The last day of the kettle season is Saturday, Dec. 23.
- Call 800-SAL-ARMY (725-2769) to make a credit card donation.

Poverty is an everyday battle. People experiencing poverty are not without hope – their lives are just harder than they should be. The Salvation Army is helping to make their lives a little easier, thanks to your gifts of time and money. Join us in the fight for good by giving online or donating at a red kettle, becoming a volunteer bell ringer, or recruiting your own army as a fundraiser on RedKettleReason.org. This year's winners were as follows: top left - 1st place went to radiology (X-Ray), top right - 2nd place went to finance and right - 3rd place went to medical records. With the possibility of this being the last year in the current location and moving to a bigger facility in the months to come, it will be exciting to see how many doors will be in next year's contest. The first Camp Christmas program was the Home School Students art program. The students referred to the program leader as Mrs. Mary. The second Camp Christmas program was held for the students who attend the McKenzie County School District. The art teacher, her daughter, Rachel and son, Joe also participated and helped their mother with the week long area program that was held through the Long X Art Foundation. The children as well as their parents, in both of the these different classes enjoyed their time, and are looking forward to the next art program that Mrs. Mary puts on. It was an amazing afternoon, Mrs. Mary interacts with her students amazingly and even managed to get me involved. I cannot wait either until her next art program is announced.
